ABSTRAK

Abdul Rahman Yusuf Factors Affecting Nursing Rounds in the Inpatient Room of Otanaha Hospital, Gorontalo City Guided by Sabirin B. Syukur as the first supervisor and Euis Hidayat as the second supervisor

Background: Nursing rounds will provide a medium for nurses to discuss health problems and patient needs in more depth and are a learning process for nurses using the hope of improving cognitive, effective, and psychomotor abilities. Nurses' sensitivity and critical thinking will grow and be trained through a transfer of knowledge and application of theoretical concepts into nursing practice. Purpose: This study aims to determine the factors that affect nursing rounds in the inpatient room of Otanaha Hospital, Gorontalo City. Method: This study uses a descriptive analytical design with a cross-sectional approach. Results: From the results of statistical tests using the Wilcoxon test, it was found that knowledge influences the implementation of nursing rounds in the Inpatient Room of Otanaha Hospital, Gorontalo City with a p value of 0.0002. From the results of statistical tests using the Wilcoxon test, it was found that attitudes influence the implementation of nursing rounds in the Inpatient Room of Otanaha Hospital, Gorontalo City with a p value of 0.003. Conclusion: The implementation of nursing rounds will run well with good knowledge, positive attitudes, good subjective norms, and good intentions from nurses to implement nursing rounds. So that training is needed on nursing rounds and the implementation of nursing rounds regularly and continuously. It is hoped that with these improvements, the implementation of nursing rounds can be more optimal and contribute to improving the quality of patient care.

Keywords: Nursing rounds, Work environment, Otanaha Hospital